

Sam Hardin
Nov 3, 2010

Dad,

I have been having trouble writing this letter to you. As I look back to my childhood I realized that we never had a true father/son relationship. It was with mom that I was truly a child. I was just a confused boy and you took advantage of me and the urges that were going through me that I had no idea what they were. You were the adult. You could have stopped it anytime or even kept it from happening in the first place. You should have talked to me. Instead you smoked pot and kept yourself distant from all of us. I had to look to church to find a true father figure. You should have been there for me instead of taking advantage of me. I really don't want to have anything to do with you the rest of my life. You were barely there for the first part of my life, I don't need you for the rest.